Manufacturing

Manufacturing plays an integral role in our lives, providing us with the goods we use and consume each day. New technologies, designs and processes have allowed this industry to become more productive and connected on a global scale. With this constant evolution, manufacturing operations have become more complex and subject to an ever-increasing number of risk factors. When actualized, these risks can result in a loss of sales that need to be quantified.

MDD has global experience across hundreds of types of manufacturing operations. Our skilled professionals understand the manufacturing industry on both a micro and macro level.

They have evaluated and quantified production and supply chain losses pertaining to building collapses, equipment breakdowns, fire, flood and natural disasters/catastrophes, contaminated and maliciously tampered products and more. Our professionals have also been engaged on claims related to cyber and extortion related activity.

MDD can provide expert witness testimony when needed, taking into account all of the factors and complexities that are connected to the incident in question. Our professionals also provide litigation support services such as written reports and other forms of documentation to clients.

MDD provides services for the manufacturing industry such as:

- Determining whether or not a loss of production translated to a loss of sales
- Calculating lost profits, stock and contents losses, business interruption losses and increased costs of working
- Assessing the impact that other locations and alternative production scenarios had on sales after a planned shutdown or unplanned incident
