

Printing, Pulp, Paper, and Wood

Technological changes, demographics, deforestation risk, and resource concerns can significantly affect the pulp and paper industry. Machinery breakdowns and other technical disruptions can strongly impact pulp and paper mills as new advances like remote mill automation occur. Although the newsprint and graphic paper segments have declined with the rise of digital print media, the industry continues to grow and shift due to the vast number of consumer and industrial packaging products and alternative paper products being established.

As a result of the many changes seen in this industry, the need to quantify damages related to business interruption, extra expense, lost profits, physical damages, liability losses, stock & contents, personal injury, and wrongful death can be numerous.

MDD has quantified economic damages for pulp and paper mills, newsprint mills, paperboard mills, and manufacturing facilities related to alternative paper products. We have also been retained on files related to commercial printing, sawmills, woodworking, paper merchant wholesalers, book, periodical, newspaper merchant wholesalers, and newspaper publishers, in addition to many others.

MDD can provide expert witness testimony when needed, considering all of the factors and complexities connected to the incident in question. Our professionals also offer clients litigation support services such as written reports and other forms of documentation.
